Israel Patrols 'Prowl' Along Gaza Border in View of Times Reporter

"The little Palestinian city of Gaza, whose history throughout centuries has been intrinsic with the issues of violence and disagreement," is the description of "The Times" in a special article last week which refers briefly to its history from Samson, through the Crusaders and Aliens to the present, "interminable bickering and recriminations of Egyptians and Israelis."

"For generations its inhabitants have been accustomed to perpetual political upheavals, changes of regime, wars and conquests," the correspondent says. He goes on to describe the town as "a pleasant and peaceful little place," but when he comes to the demarcation line he writes: "On the other side there runs a track which prowling Israel patrols often visit," as he emphasizes the "prowling" character of the Israel patrols, he describes the Egyptian soldiers along the Gaza border as "distinctly not there for the fun of it; and across the valley, among clumps of cypress trees, 'the watchful windows of an Israel observation post.'"

Arab Outpost

The title of the article is "Watchful Atmosphere in Gaza — Isolated outpost of Arab Rule," and the correspondent writes that the town has become more Egyptian in aspect than it used to be. He goes on: "There are still desert Bedouins in its streets (still travelling from time to time, across the Israel Negev to Jordan, and Palestinian women in embroidered gowns but the stamp of Egypt is apparent. Pictures of Egyptian leaders hang in many of its shops and offices. A few young men can even be seen wearing bright shirts decorated with pictures of tanks, bombers, anti-aircraft guns and Colonel Nasser."

"Egyptian judges share the duties of jurisdiction with local jurists, and the controlling administrative body is a majority of Egyptian members (an elected legislative assembly is promised). There is a body called the All-Palestine Government, which lives in a flat in Cairo and issues passports recognized by most of the Arab countries, but it extends to Gaza at all is not intrusive, and it is the Egyptian."
